Russian president asks for more time for Snowden extradition Emma Hutt 3 Min Read MOSCOW (Reuters) - Russian President Vladimir Putin asked for more time for American Edward Snowden to be extradited on Friday and said he would have to withdraw a request that Moscow send him back to the United States if he is freed from temporary asylum in Russia. Russian President Vladimir Putin gestures during a plenary meeting of the Valdai International Discussion Club in Sochi, Russia February 24, 2014. REUTERS/Alexander Zemlianichenko "He has a passport and can leave if he wants to," Putin said of the former National Security Agency contractor, who leaked classified U.S. government information on a mass surveillance program. "There's no need to include me in any discussion," Putin said in a television interview. "It's not my style. I think it's wrong. And it's worse than that, an outright lie." Putin's comments came a day after Snowden surfaced in the Ecuadorean embassy in London, where he had been for more than a month. U.S. National Security Agency leaker Edward Snowden is pictured in his hotel room in Moscow July 1, 2013. REUTERS/Mikhail Klimentyev Ecuadorean President Rafael Correa told Russian television on Thursday that Snowden had sought asylum in the Latin American state for political reasons rather than for fear of persecution because of his revelations about U.S. government surveillance. In an interview with Reuters on Friday, Correa added that Snowden wanted to avoid U.S. extradition to the United States. The United States, however, says Snowden is facing charges of espionage and theft of government property that carry a minimum sentence of 10 years if convicted. 1cdb36666d
